

Conservation must be the first line of defense for increased demand for water. Despite our best efforts at conservation, Colorado is estimated to require an additional 630,000 acre feet of water by year 2030 to meet projected needs. We must take a comprehensive approach that involves water conservation as well as moving forward with additional water storage projects.